The European Government servants on receipt of Rs. 400 per month or less and their families and those who subscribe annually to this institution up to the extent of Rs. 100 are admitted to the first class on payment of intermediate class rates—vide rules 20 and 45 (a). These rules were taken advantage of by five persons during the year 1917.

15. Eleven labour cases were attended by the Civil Surgeon during the year 1917 against seven in the year 1916, and the confinement fees realised from the patients were paid to him as honorarium.

(i) There were 2 cases of Dysentery last year against 5 in 1916.

The patients were cured. (ii) There were 2 cases of Enteric fever in 1917 against 5 in 1916.

Both of them died. (iii) There were 6 cases of Malarial fever in 1917 against 16 in 1916. The patients were cured.

- (iv) There were 4 cases of Pneumonia in 1917 against 3 in 1916. The patients were all cured.
- (v) There was 1 case of Tuberculosis in 1917 against 2 in the year previous to it. The patient was discharged, much relieved.
- (vi) There was a case of Appendicitis last year against 4 in the year 1916. The patient was cured.

(vii) There was I case of Bright's disease treated in the hospital in the year 1917 against 1 in the year previous to it. The patient who had chronic Bright's disease died.

(viii) There were 16 normal labour cases and one abnormal labour case treated in the year 1917 against 13 and 1, respectively, in the year 1916. The patients were cured.

17. During the year under report 14 operations were performed against 81 in the year 1916.

18. Income and Expenditure

19. Explanation of increase and decrease.

Receipts.

(a) The increase of Rs. 11,168-8 in the receipts from the residents and patients admitted into the first class is due to the admission of more people in that class in the year 1917 as compared with 1916.

(b) The increase of Rs. 266-7-6 in the Nurses' fees in 1917 is due to the more employment of nurses in the outside cases and also in special cases in the hospital attached to the Sanitarium as compared with the year 1916.

(c) The increase of Rs. 708-11-9 against fees for medical attendance is due to the treatment of more patients in the Sanitarium and Hospital in the year 1917 as compared with the year 1916.

(d) The small increase against the head "Breakages" calls for no

(e) The increase of Rs. 60 against the head "X Ray" is due to the fact that in 1916 the "X Ray" apparatus was not in working order. The increase of Rs. 60 in the year 1917 against this head is due to the sale of a Switchboard which was not required to Dr. J. C. Bose.

(f) In the year 1916 a new billiard table cloth was purchased, and for this reason there was no credit balance against the head "Billiards." In the year 1917 there was a surplus of Rs. 26-1 against this head after meeting all expenditures, such as the pay of billiard marker, etc.

(g) The "Interest on Investments" and the "Interest" accrued on credit balance in the banks were shown separately in the accounts this year. So there has been an increase by Rs. 31-10 against "Interest" and decrease by Rs. 36-11-8 against "Interest on Investments."

The decrease in the receipts against the head "Intermediate class" by Rs. 1,825-10 was due to the fact that the Intermediate class rooms were mostly occupied throughout the year by the first class residents who had their meals in the first class table.

- (i) The decrease of receipts from the second and third class residents was due to the admission of less number of people and also their staying in this institution for less number of days in 1917 as compared with the year 1916. Owing to the war the cost of living in the hills became very much expensive and the issue of week-end and return tickets by the Railway Companies was prohibited, and this might have prevented many people, who generally ask for accommedation in these classes, from visiting this hill
- (j) The fall in the receipts for "Operation fees" in 1917 was due to the less number of operations performed in that year as compared with the year 1916.
- (k) In the year 1917 less number of persons were treated in the hospital free beds, hence there has been a fall in the receipts by Rs. 334-8 as compared with the year 1916.

(1) The fluctuations against other heads of receipts were trifling and call for no remarks.

Expenditure.

(a) The increase in the allowance drawn by the Civil Surgeon in 1917 is due to the payment to him of "Confinement fees" realised from the first class patients as bonorarium. This amount is now debited against "Civil Surgeon's allowance" according to the instructions of the auditors. In the year 1916 a part of this amount was debited against the head "Medical attendance" before the receipt of such instructions.

(b) The increase of expenditure against "Nurses' salaries" and travelling allowance is due to the employment of a few outside nurses to help in serious cases and confinements.

(c) The increase of expanditure by Rs. 5,118-8-6 against "Diet" in 1917 is due to the admission of more first class residents in the Sanitarium as compared with the year 1916. It is also due to the decision of the Committee, dated the 12th June 1917, to spend a little more on diet owing to certain complaints which were received regarding the quality and quantity of food supplied.

(d) The increase of expenditure against the head "Fuel" in 1917 by Rs. 221-11-3 is due partly to the admissions of more first class residents. is also due to the increase of price of coal and firewood as compared with the year 1916 owing to the war.

(e) Against the head "General Charges" the expenditure incurred for the railway freight on goods, purchase of postage and receipt stamps, the costs for the repairs to the utensils and other petty items of expenditure are shown. The increase of expenditure against this head is trifling and calls for no remarks.

(f) The increase of expenditure against "Stationery and Printing" is

- due to the price of these articles having gone up on account of the war.

 (y) The small increase of expenditure for "Advertisements" in 1917 is due to the increase of rate of advertisements as compared with the year 1916.
- (h) The increase of expenditure by Rs. 456-9 against the head "Repair and Construction" is partly due to the price of materials having gone up on account of the war and also to the payment of Rs. 352-6 to Messrs. Baghman & Co., for carrying out certain repairs to the electric light wires in the Sanitarium and Hospital and supplying bulbs for the rooms.
- (i) The amount against "Rates and Taxes" will vary each year as the charge for excess water supplied by the Municipality is debited in this head of accounts.
- (j) The increase of expenditure against the head "Establishment" in 1917 is due to the payment of travelling allowance to Captain Harding. Resident Medical Officer, from Madras to Darjeeling, and also to the entertainment of a few extra servants when the house was full during the season.
- (k) The increase of Rs. 583-5-2 against "Insurance" is due to the adjustment of past years' balance within the year 1917.
- (1) The increase of expenditure against the head "Servants' Clothing" in the year 1917 is due to the price of the materials having gone up on account of the war. It is also due to the changing of some uniforms for servants which had turned out old.
- (m) In the year 1917 medicines were purchased locally according to the requirements, and as there were certain medicines in stock the expenditure was less by Rs. 770-0-6 as compared with the year 1916.
- (n) The decrease of expenditure in 1917 against the head "Lighting" is due to the revision of the rule 28(a) in May 1917. The Committee resolved that the charge for lighting will be annus 4 for first and intermediate and annas 21 per diem for second class adult inmates. Formerly the charge for lighting for the first and intermediate class rooms was annas 4 each and for the second class room annas 21 per diem.
- (o) The fluctuations against other heads of expenditure are triffing and call for no remarks.
- 20. Conoral Remarks.—The daily average cost of diet for residents including the staff was Re. 1-11-9 as compared with Re. 1-7-5 in the year 1916. The cause of increase has been fully explained in item (a), expenditure on " Diet."
- 21. The debit of the amount of Rs. 2,346-10-9 in the Revenue account, on account of depreciation on Furniture and Library, has reduced the profit for the working of the year 1917 to Rs. 3,624-4-1. The depreciation is not really expenditure and is not taken in to account in the Government accounts So if this amount is excluded from the above statement the real profit on the working of the institution during the year 1917, excluding the balance for the year previous to it, will amount to Rs. 5.970-14-10.
- 22. Beyond the ordinary repairs to the buildings carried on by the Public Works Department no other improvements of any importance were carried out in the year 1917.

- 23. The Sanitarium was officially visited by His Excellency the Governor of Bengal and the following House-Visitors in the year 1917:-
 - (1) Rev. Canon R. Stuart. (2) Rev. H. C. Duncan, M.A.
 - (3) Rev. Father C. Grant. (4) E. A. Wernicke, Esq. (5) C. E. Briscoe, Esq.

24. Sister Mary Frances, C.S., J.B., was in charge of the nurses and linen room and the Library attached to the Sanitarium.

25. The Committee accepted the resignation of Captain Harding in July 1917 on account of his ill health, and Mr. J. C. Chalke was appointed Resident Medical Officer till the Sanitarium was closed.

26. Miss L. Cox acted as House-Keeper and Babu Sidheswar Dey as Accountant of this institution throughout the year 1917.

The staff of this institution worked entirely to my satisfaction.

27. The Committee held seven meetings against a satisfaction.

The Committee held seven meetings against eight in the year 1916. The most important subject dealt with was alterations to certain rules.

GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL

POLITICAL DEPARTMENT.

CALCUTTA, THE 17TH JUNE 1918.

RESOLUTION.

THE Governor in Council has decided to appoint a Committee to advise him in respect of the cases of those persons now under restraint, or who, during the sittings of the Committee, may be placed under restraint, either under the provisions of the Defence of India Act (Act IV of 1915); the Ingress into India Ordinance (V of 1914) (to the extent that the persons so dealt with belong to the province of Bengal); or Regulation III of 1818, whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that they had acted. were acting or were about to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety or the defence of British India.

The proceedings of the Committee will be held in camera and no Counsel will be permitted to appear. The papers of each case will be placed before the Committee by an officer deputed by the Local Government in the grouping essential to the proper understanding of them and in the manner best calculated to effect that end. Should the Committee desire further information the request will be dealt with by the Local Government to the best of their ability.

With the consent of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice of Bengal, the services of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Beachcroft have been lent as a member of the Committee, which will also comprise Sir Narayan Ganesh Chandavarkar, who has kindly consented to serve.

By order of the Governor in Council,

H. L. STEPHENSON Addl. Secy. to the Govt. of Bengal.

MEMORANDUM.

In submitting to Government our opinion on each of the cases examined by us, we desire to explain our proceedings with special reference—

- (1) to the procedure which we have adopted within the limits of our authority prescribed by Government in their Resolution appointing our Committee,
- (2) to the principles and rules (of law and evidence) which we have followed in weighing the testimony in each case, and
- (3) the appropriateness of that procedure and those principles and rules to the exceptional circumstances, extent and character, of the revolutionary crime out of which the cases we have examined have arisen.
- II. The total number of cases examined and advised on by us is 806. Of these 100 related to State prisoners dealt with under Regulation III of 1818; 702 to internees under the Defence of India Act; and 4 to persons dealt with under the Indian Ingress Ordinance. In 6 of the total number of cases examined by us, we have advised Government that there are not sufficient grounds, in our opinion, for believing that the parties concerned have acted in a manner prejudicial to the public safety or the defence of British India, and that, therefore, they should be unconditionally released. In the rest we have advised that the parties have, in our opinion, so acted.
- out of the movement of revolutionary crime in Bengal, have been dealt with by us for convenience under certain groups, suggested by the course of events and by the developments of the investigation by the police. The groups are 18 in number, of which 6 consist of members of the Dacca Anushilan Samiti; the German plot and the conspiracy for the theft of Rodda's mausers form separate groups; and the remaining sections, except the miscellaneous section, relate to the various branches of the Western Bengal party, which party extended its operations also into Eastern Bengal. The miscellaneous group is very small. This formation of groups is based on the organisation of the revolutionaries themselves, except in the case of the Dacca Anushilan Samiti, which is one self-contained organisation.
- IV. Our study and examination of the cases have impressed us with the correctness of the conclusion arrived at in their Report by the Sedition Committee, 1918 (presided over by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Rowlatt) as to the alliance and inter-connection of all the groups, formed into one revolutionary movement with one common object, viz., the overthrow of His Majesty's Government in India by force. All the individual cases stand so closely inter-connected as parts of one whole, that they form, both as to the personnel and the acts of crime, one continuous movement of revolution, which must be regarded as living and prolonged in all its parts until the movement is completely extinguished.

We desire to emphasise this view of the inter-connection of these revolutionary organisations because (as we shall show presently in this memorandum) of the practical importance of that inter-connection in a judicial investigation of these cases of revolutionary crime.

- V. The procedure adopted by us in examining the cases was as follows:
 - (1) At the very outset we invited through the Additional Secretary to Government a written representation from each party, stating his defence, duly signed by him and submitted to this Committee through the usual official channel. In only 167 out of 806, the total number of cases examined by us, bave we received written representations. These we have considered.

The usual official channel being, we understand, the consoring authority, the use of the latter expression for the former in the official intimation given to the parties to submit their defences to us in writing appears to have given rise in some quarters to the impression that these defences were subject to censorship before their submission to us. That impression is erroneous. The representations appear to have reached us in their original condition without any interference on the part of the censoring or other authority, as may be seen from the fact that the representations in some, though but a very few cases, use free and strong language and allege ill-treatment and torture.

- (2) In each case (except where the party has been convicted or bound down by a Criminal Court) we have taken care to see that the parties were duly informed of the charges against them by a formulation in each case of the charges in writing, and that the answers to the charges were duly taken down in full. In most of the cases, the charges had already been formulated and the answers recorded. In addition, in most cases, a statement of the party had also been taken down in writing.
- (3) In cases where there had been an omission to formulate the charges, the procedure adopted by us was this. Where the party concerned had made a confession of his crime, and the confession was distinct. or where the party had made an exculpatory statement in writing, and it was unmistakeably clear from that statement that he had distinct intimation of the specific charges against him as a revolutionary, the mere omission to frame a charge and record the answer in writing has been treated by us as a more technical irregularity, not affecting the merits of the case. Where, however, such statement was absent, or, having been made, it did not show clearly that the party had distinct intimation of the charges against him, we directed a proper formulation of the charges and the answers thereto of the party concerned being taken down in writing and sent to us for the purposes of our finding.

(4) Wherever in any individual case we found that any point relevant to it was obscure and required further elucidation, we called for information on that point, and had it made clear before recording our finding.

(5) We examined some of the Police officers, European and Indian. who were concerned in the investigation of the crime with a view to obtain full information on the methods employed in the detection of the crime, the obtaining of confessions, and the conduct of searches.

(6) We carefully inspected the large and various number of Exhibits collected together in the Museum at the Police Training College, consisting of bombs, arms, ammunition, materials of dacoity, seditious letters, books, papers, etc., which had been either produced in Courts at the trial of revolutionaries for murder or dacoity, or seized by the police during searches or while apprehending offenders for revolutionary crime.

VI. The terms of reference to us, defining our jurisdiction, directed that our proceedings should be held "in camera," and no Counsel would be permitted to appear. Nothing was said on the question of our power to require before us for the purposes of our examination of the cases the presence of any of the parties concerned, if in our discretion we deemed such presence necessary. Impliedly, therefore, we had that power but we have not exercised it for the following reasons: (1) Our Committee is in the nature of an appellate or revising authority, which does not usually require the presence of a convicted party in revising his case. (2) Even then, we might have exercised our discretion by requiring the presence of a party had we in any case found it necessary in the interests of the party himself. But in no case did such necessity, in our opinion, arise. We did not think that hearing his defence from his own mouth would have placed a party in a better position than a written defence prepared by him after full deliberation and submitted to us for consideration. Such written defence we invited. From our judicial experience we have found that if an accused person is not defended by Counsel, he, generally speaking, spoils his case when he conducts his own defence or in answer to questions from the trying Judge either gives irrelevant answers, or makes vague protests of innocence. or makes unwittingly admissions against himself, or by his demeanour in answering questions prejudices his defence by producing an unfavourable impression on the mind of the Judge. That risk to the parties whose cases we have examined was almost certain, seeing that from 70 to 80 per cent. of them are inexperienced and young students. (3) The exceptional conditions of revolutionary crime and the special procedure of judicial investigation necessitated by those conditions (with which we deal in the concluding part of this memorandum) have also weighed with us in not calling the parties before us. The Sedition Committee, 1918, have pointed out in their Report that several of those, who have made long and detailed confessions to the police and thrown light on revolutionary organisations and crime and enabled Government to track their course successfully stage by stage, have made those confessions on "a well-understood though often unexpressed condition," that their names will not be divulged, and that scrupulous care will be taken to save them from exposure "to the vengeance of their associates" (page 21 of the Report). We have satisfied ourselves that those persons are unwilling to appear before any judicial or quasi-judicial tribunal, however constituted, whother sitting in open court or "in camera," and make any statement or answer any questions. Under those circumstances, so differentiate between them and others would have been dangerous.

VII. The principles and rules of evidence which we have applied in examining the merits of each case will be best made clear by dividing the cases into three classes-

First.—Persons who have made confessions of the crime to the police. Second .- Persons who have made no such confessions but who have been named as members of the revolutionary organisation by persons who have confessed.

-Persons who do not fall under either of the above heads, i.e., persons against whom the evidence is other than that of confessions or of accomplice testimony.

Dealing with the first of these three classes, it is to be remarked, that, of the total of eight hundred and six cases examined by us. one hundred and sixty-eight were cases of confessions. Only eighteen out of of these one hundred and sixty-eight have retracted their confessions by their written representations addressed to us. In only ten cases in all are there allegations of torture—seven of these are from the Presidency and the rest from the Alipur Jail. It is also to be noted that of these ten persons 7 did not plead torture before the degree of the seven and the company of the seven are the seven hundred and sixty-eight were cases of confessions. 7 did not plead torture before the commencement of our enquiry, 2 not till 19 months and one not till 4 months after the alleged ill-treatment. Thirteen of the parties who have addressed written representations to us have in their repesentations either made full or partial admissions of guilt or stated that they have nothing to say against the charges.

It is a most remarkable feature of the cases we have examined that almost without exception the persons who had been, before arrest, among the most active and dangerous members of the revolutionary movement, but who, after arrest, have been repentant and realised their situation and have made full confessions, giving, with fullness of detail, information about it, and whose information has been most helpful to the police in unravelling the plot and successfully breaking up the revolutionary organisation, have not retracted their confessions; they have made no complaint of torture or ill-treatment, but have adhered to the confessions faithfully.

Our examination of the cases had led us to the conclusion that the confessions are due to remorse and repentance on the part of those who have made them and their honest belief that if they disclose the whole truth and help Government in extinguishing revoluntary crime, they will find all easy for themselves,

IX. For the purpose of determining the admissibility in evidence of a confession made to the police by a person arrested for revolutionary crime and, of appraising its evidentiary value in a judicial investigation conducted on the lines and within the limits prescribed by the Government in their terms of reference to us, it is important to keep in view the radical difference between the nature and conditions of ordinary crime on the one hand, and of revolutionary crime on the other with special reference to the means and machinery which it is rendered necessary in the public interests for the State to employ in accordance with its constitutional powers and obligations for the purpose of preventing that crime, securing its detection and its punishment when detected.

With the broad ground on which this distinction rests from the judicial point of view, we deal in the concluding part of this memorandum. Here we state the difference so far as it bears on the question of confessions made to the police.

X. Ordinary crime, by which we mean crime which is committed for private purposes and not with the object of upsetting the Government and striking at its very foundations and authority, is individual in its nature, that is to say, when a person is arrested for such crime and tried in a Criminal Court, there is an end of the case, whether he is convicted or acquitted. A confession, therefore, whether made to the police or to a Magistrate before trial or to the trying Court, is in operation and serves its purpose only until the case is tried and disposed of. The means and process of sifting its truth continue up to the result of the trial in a Court; when the trial ends, the confession has exhausted itself, after that the confession dies, as it were, and being no longer operative, it is not any further subject to the sifting process of truth. Under these conditions a Police officer is liable, as human nature goes, to the temptation of making up a case by extorting a confession and securing credit with the least labour and trouble. On this ground of policy, therefore, a confession made to a Police officer is made inadmissible in evidence, subject to one exception (embodied in the Indian Evidence Act) that so much of a statement made to a Police officer by an accused person as leads to the discovery of any material fact is admissible.

XI. It is otherwise with crime arising out of and directly connected with a revolutionary organisation which aims at the overthrow of the established Government of the land, which has extended over a more or less wide area, embraced a large number of persons, and which carries on its criminal operations by means of secret conspiracies, terrorism. dacoities, and murders. Unlike ordinary crime, which being individual and standing by itself, dies when it has been detected and disposed of and no longer continues its operation revolutionary crime is collective and continuous in its operation. Its individual members are inter-connected, each influences the continuous fortunes of the whole as to the activity of the organisation in the prosecution of its revolutionary purposes.

If an individual member of the revolutionary organisation is arrested and dealt with by the State, the revolutionary crime does not end, it goes on, and where a person arrested confesses the crime, the confession is useful to Government only if it becomes a starting point to the police for fresh investigation of the crime, continuous as it is. Every such confession, so far from exhausting its activity with the arrest and disposal, according to law, of the person making it, continues subject to the sifting process of truth for a long period. The temptation, therefore, to which a Police officer is exposed, of extorting confessions, true or false, in the case of ordinary crime is very much less in the case of revolutionary crime. The risk which the police run of certain exposure is greater in the latter than in the former.

XII. In the case, therefore, of confessions made to Police officers, by persons arrested on the charge of revolutionery crime, the question of their admissibility in evidence and of the weight to be attached to them, when admitted, must depend not on whether those confessions were extorted either by torture, or inducement or other like means, but on whether the confessions are true, such confessions, by the very nature and conditions of revolutionary crime, continuously—so long as the revolutionary crime is continuous—undergoing certain tests as to their truth. The tests are: Has the person who admitted to the police his complicity in revolutionary crime stopped there or has he gone further and given a history of the organisation, its members, its materials, its methods, its actions and plots, its planned operations, so far as he knows them and had the means of knowing them? Has the information which he has given to the police put them on the right track of the revolutionary movement? Has he led them step by step to the capture of persons, arms, ammunition, and other articles of revolutionary crime? Have the concrete facts referred to by the confessing party been verified as a result of subsequent enquiries made by means of the clues he has furnished or clues found by the police independently from other sources or by other means? Has the information he has given as to planned dacoities or murders been verified by those dacoities or murders taking place? Have the places or houses mentioned by him as the rendezvous of revolutionaries or the hiding places of absconders been, when raided, proved to be such by the discovery of arms, ammunition, seditious literature or other incriminating papers and material? Have the absconders who were long in hiding and could not be traced been arrested in substantially the same conditions as were disclosed in the confessions before the arrests? Above all, has the confession helped the authorities in advancing step by step in the direction of breaking up the revolutionary organisations? These tests afford the sure means for finding whether the confessions are true and may be safely acted upon in adjudging the question of the guilty or innocence of the party confessing and of other parties implicated by him.

Before examining each of the cases on its merits, we applied ourselves at the outset of our enquiry to a careful scrutiny of the most important of the confessions, with a view to find out whether and how far they satisfied the tests above mentioned. In that scrutiny we had this advantage that we were called upon to examine each of the cases not as and when it arose, but long after the confessions, which have proved helpful to the police in successfully and step by step coping with revolutionary crime, had sufficient time—in some cases years, in some cases months—to undergo the sifting process of truth and prove themselves by the discoveries made, absconders traced and arrested, hidden revolutionary haunts, arms and ammunition and other materials of revolutionary orime found in consequence of information and clues given in the confessions. We are satisfied that the police have taken care to see that the confessions they have obtained are true and have been helpful. We have come across cases which show that sometimes the police have been over-cautious in that respect For instance, we have come across a case where a party after arrest implicated himself in a dacoity in his confession, but the police judging apparently from the inherent character of the statements would not believe that he had taken part in that dacoity. He was told, therefore, that he was trying to mislead the police. Subsequent discoveries and information from independent sources having, however, gone to corroborate the story of the party as to the part he had taken in the dacoity, he was again questioned and reaffirmed his story on oath taken by touching the feet of an elderly relation. In another case, the party concerned admitting his character as a member of revolutionary organisations, had, by important disclosures, materially helped the police in the tracing out of abscondere and the discovery of revolvers, etc. In the course of subsequent investigation the police, however, found that the party in question had concealed the more serious of his own crimes, such as dacoities and murders, etc. Confronted with those proofs, he admitted he had concealed some of the more serious of his own crimes from the police. In the result he was dealt with as a State prisoner.

XIV. We need not pursue further the great care which appears to us to have been taken to secure confessions, true and helpful, in unearthing the secret course of revolutionary organisations.

XV. Information given by a confessing revolutionary about concealed arms and ammunition or other materials of revolutionary crime and their discovery in consequence of such information may be open to the suspicion that the police may have planted the materials in certain places and then pretended to have found them there by the light of that information. The volume of the material discovered precludes any such idea in the cases before us. Arms and ammunition or explosives have been recovered from more than 80 active revolutionaries since the commencement of the war. In all but 7 of these cases the man with whom the arms were found had been mentioned as a revolutionary before his arrest, either in revolutionary documents or by his associates. Further, apart from the fact that it would have been impossible to plant materials in so many places throughout India, each leading to the discovery of materials in other places, there cannot be the slightest ground for suspicion where, as has been the case in many instances before us, in consequence of disclosures made by confessing revolutionaries, the police have been able to trace and arrest revolutionary absconders, who had eluded detection—some for years and some for monthsafter their names had been mentioned in the confessions. The remarkable point about the confessions was that the absconders were named as hiding in certain groups or batches, the persons forming a group were mentioned, and when they were arrested, they were found in very much the same groups, as had been disclosed by the confessions. The confessions, which have so operated and put the police on the right track, are still operating in that way, as we have been able to find from the cases of absconders who have been arrested after the commencement of our enquiry, and whose cases also have been examined by us since.

XVI. The second class of cases we have examined consists of persons, who have made no confessions but against whom the evidence is of accomplices, i.e., of persons who have confessed their complicity in revolutionary crime and implicated others by name as members of the organisation. According to the Indian Evidence Act and the English rule of law, the testimony of an accomplice or approver is admissible in evidence; but it has been the practice of the Courts not to convict an accused person on such testimony if it is not corroborated in material particulars relating to the accused. In most of the cases before us material corroboration exists. In the rest the testimony has been solely that of accomplices. The Indian Evidence Act and the English law agree that, though it is not safe as a rule to convict on the unsupported testimony of an accomplice, yet a conviction based only on such testimony is not illegal. "The general current of authority is strong and unvarying to the effect that the Judge should direct the jury that they may convict on the unsupported testimony of an accomplice, but that he should advise them in all ordinary cases not to do so." (Wills on Circumstantial Evidence.) Crimes arising out of and committed by members of secret revolutionary conspiracies are not ordinary cases. As by their vows and their methods the conspirators carry on their crimes in the closest secrecy and spread torrorism among the public. the evidence obtainable in such cases can only be for the most part of accomplices. If, therefore, a confession made by a revolutionary is found to be true, when judged by the tests mentioned above, it is entitled to weight as a reliable piece of evidence, not only against the confessing revolutionary himself, but also against others whom he has implicated with himself in revolutionary crime, unless there is anything to show that the revolutionary confessing and implicating those others had some indirect motive to falsely implicate them. The cases before us where any private enmity has been alleged are very few indeed. Two considerations must be regarded as of considerable weight in this connection. Most of the persons confessing have been students whose ages vary between 18 and 22. Whoever has had any intimate knowledge and experience of student life in India knows that, whatever the infirmities of Indian students, however impulsive and liable to be led away by sentiment, they are, generally speaking, not given to implicating others in crime falsely. They may and indeed do often suppress the truth as to others involved in crime with them, but it is rarely the case that they falsely name others as criminals with them. It is possible to suggest that, though a person confessing to a revolutionary erime may have no indirect motive himself for implicating others falsely in the crime, yet he may do that at the instigation of the police to enable them to bring into trouble every one on whom they have their eye, rightly or wrongly, as a political suspect. Examining the confessions from that point of view, we have found that the parties have in their confessions implicated certain persons of their own accord and given cluss to their identity by disclosing to the police their secret nicknames as members of revolutionary organisations and other details which the police had no means of knowing otherwise, and which were confirmed by subsequent discoveries of revolutionary correspondence and cipher lists. We have come across cases, of which the following may be cited as a typical illustra-tion: A certain detenu, whom we shall call A here, and whose case has been before us was charged as a revolutionary, who had opened in Calcutta a mess harbouring students who were members the of revolutionary party. The evidence to support that charge was of certain approvers and certain incriminating circumstances. In his defence, he admitted that he had let a portion of his residence for a students' mess, but he denied that he had kept that mess or had anything to do with its members. He pleaded that beyond taking rent from the students of the mess, he had no connection with or knowledge of them. The case was placed before us with that material for our examination, and we examined it on those materials and disposed of it. Subsequently, in the examination of other cases, we found that there was other evidence against A- evidence which was undersigned, and as such had escaped the notice of the police, and therefore was not brought in so as to form a part of the record of A's case placed before us or before any authority, who had to deal with the case previously with a view to action under the Defence of India Act. This new evidence, which had escaped notice, but which we were able to detect because of its cogency, was specially valuable by reason of the fact that it consisted partly of the testimony of approvers and partly of statements made by persons arrested, in places, more or less far away from Calcutta under the Defence of India Act. These latter did not confess but pleaded innocence, and in their exculpatory statements they incidentally mentioned A's mess in giving an account of their movements in Calcutta and other places. One those persons was a relation of A himself. They all mentioned the mess as A's where they had lodged and boarded with A. they made those statements, neither they nor the police (outside Calcutta) to whom they were made, had the remotest idea that the statements had a bearing on the case against A. Though the statements were reported to the police in Calcutta in the usual course of official business, the latter proved their bond fides by not bringing them in as additional evidence against A. That evdence was of students who named A incidentally to describe their own movements and to prove their own innocence without any idea of implicating A

XVII. The third and last class of cases we have examined consists of persons who do not fall under either one or the other of the classes dealt with above. They are-

(1) Persons who, having been convicted and sentenced to terms of imprisonment by Criminal Courts for either political dacoities or other political offences, have been released from jail, and dealt with either as State prisoners or internees. Though these persons have suffered for their crimes the penalty imposed upon them by the Criminal Courts, there is a strong presumption against them that they were members of revolutionary organisations, and have acted in a manner prejudical to the public safety or the defence of British India, and that therefore their liberty should be restricted under either Regulation III of 1818 or the Defence of India Act, until Government are satisfied that they are penitent and no longer constitute a danger to the State and society.

(2) Persons who have been bound down by Criminal Courts either under section 109 or section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure under circumstances disclosed in the proceedings of those Courts which raise a strong presumption of their complicity in revolutionary crime. The same considerations that apply to (1) above apply to this class of persons.

(3) Persons arrested while in possession of arms or ammunition or other incriminating materials and articles of revolutionary crime. These persons under the circumstances of the arrest carry their own evidence against themselves.

(4) Persons caught under incriminating circumstances, such as shadowing Police officers engaged in the duty of investigating and unearthing revolutionary crime, against whom there is other evidence also.

(5) Persons incriminated as revolutionaries in the cipher lists, correspendence and other papers of revolutionary organisations found at the searches of revolutionary resorts or on the persons of revolutionaries when arrested, and

(6) Persons who, though they have not confessed, have in their statements made admissions necessarily leading with other circumstances to an inference of guilt.

We have treated the evidence of ciphers as admissible against those named in the cipher lists because the records before us show conclusively that cipher language was used and cipher lists of the members of revolutionary organisations were kept as a part of their system. When a person is named in such documents as a member of a revolutionary organisation, the evidence of the cipher stands on a better footing than the testimony of an approver. When an organisation whose object is revolutionary crime works by secret methods and adopts the cipher system to conceal the names of its members and its acts and movements, we think that the ciphers, being one of the methods of the criminal conspiracy, must be regarded as a piece of evidence valuable under the circumstances. Substantially such lists are the language of the organisation itself as a whole, and may be used as evidence against any person named in the cipher unless there is anything to show that the inclusion of his name was made for purposes other than that of the revolutionary movement. The very fact that the organisation has taken care to keep a list of its members in cipher language is proof that the names of the persons mentioned were inserted there not for the purpose of of bringing any of them into difficulties, but for the purpose of saving them from detection and exposure. In using this class of evidence, we have not acted upon it alone. We have taken care to satisfy ourselves that against the party implicated by the cipher evidence there was also the evidence of other incriminating circumstances to warrant a finding adverse to him, such as his mode of life, his movements, his false explanations of suspicious circumstances admitted by him.

XIX. We have in every case declined to act on circumstances of mere suspicion, by which we mean absence of positive proof of guilt and the mere presence of circumstances of an equivocal character not necessarily leading to a presumption of crime. For instance, mere association with proved revolutionaries, or mere residence in a mess consisting of revolutionaries and others or mere seditious talk of an irresponsible character in company, without more of an incriminating nature, has been treated by us as insufficient for action, whether under Regulation III of 1818 or the Defence of India Act or the Ingress Ordinance. We should also point out that it is a part of the system of these revolutionary organisations in securing recruits for their jurposes that they begin by catching young students under the bait of religion, well knowing that the religious impulse forms the strongest element in the Indian character. In the language of one of the internees, at first they were attracted by mere religious ideas with nothing of politics—"Our idea was to reach God and not to be in touch with politics." Accordingly religious organisations were started with the ostensible purpose of indoctrinating young men with the love of God and man, but in reality and secretly aiming at the preparation of the minds of those young men in such a way as to incite them silently to revolutionary crime. The leaders of these specious religious organisations, who knew their real character and object, and who transferred the young men brought within their fold to the regular revolutionary organisations have been rightly dealt with either as State prisoners or internees. But their assistants, who brought recruits to those leaders for the purposes of the so-called religious organisations, have been held by us innocent in the absence of positive proof of knowledge on their part of the criminal character of their organisation.

Our procedure has indeed not been in full conformity with the Evidence Act and the Code of Criminal Procedure. Under the limitations of our powers, we have not been able to test the materials placed before us by means of examination and cross-examination and arguments from Counsel for the defence. That defect of our enquiry is due to the special and exceptional situation and conditions, which have been created by the revolutionary organizations, out of which the cases submitted for our examination have arisen, and which, differentiating sharply the crimes of those movements from ordinary crime and criminals, have rendered full adherence to the procedure of the Evidence Act and the Criminal Procedure Code impracticable. They have necessitated the adoption of a special procedure departing from some of the details but consistent with the basic principle of that Act and the Code. That basic principle is (1) that all procedure must be practicable, and such as to ensure, as the special circumstances permit, a fair trial, and (2) that, the law of evidence and the Code of Criminal Procedure allied to that law being merely a judicial means or machinery for sifting the truth in a case submitted for investigation, the means or machinery must be appropriate for the purposes of a fair and practicable trial to the actual conditions and situation created by the crime.

XXI. That being the basic principle and primary object of all criminal procedure, we have to take into account the exceptional situation created by the revolutionary organisations in Bengal and the distinction necessarily arising out of that situation between revolutionary crime and ordinary crime. We have already dealt in the foregoing part of this memorandum with one point of distinction between them, but a broader distinction is this. The records before us conclusively prove that the revolutionary organisations are secret conspiracies, which have spread into different parts of the Province, entered homes, schools and colleges, and have reduced their secrecy of operations almost to scientific methods. They have pledged their members to the closest secrecy of their movements on pain of instant death by murder in the event of disclosure; that is one of their rules, and every attempt has been made to give effect to it. Before the Defence of India Act was brought into force, the fair trial of a person accused of revolutionary crime had been rendered practically impossible by the murders of approvers, witnesses, Police officers and law-abiding citizens suspected by revolutionaries of having given information to or otherwise assisted the police in the detection of revolutionary crime. A situation of terrorism was created, the current of truth and justice was disturbed, so as to prevent a fair, open and impartial trial in the ordinary Criminal Courts with the result that approvers and witnesses would not come forward to give evidence openly lest they should be assassinated. In the language of one of the internees "there are very many members who are members against their will and seek some escape from the bonds of the samiti. They see no prospect. If they disobey the samiti, they will be shot. If they obey, they will be caught by the police sooner or later, and their outlook in life is hopeless. Such men would be only too willing to help Government secretly." When Jotindra Mukharji, one of the most violent leaders of the organisation, who was wounded in an open encounter with the police in 1915, had been hiding in a revolutionary resort in Calcutta, an acquaintance of his named Nirode Haldar, happening to come in one morning, merely accosted him in these words: "Holloa, Jotin." Jotin Mukharji at once drew his revolver and shot Haldar on mere suspicion that he was a spy. Revolutionaries, who having received wounds in dacoities were unable to escape, were shot dead by their associates in the dacoities for fear that if left alive they might confess and disclose the secrets of revolutionary organisations. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to secure a fair trial by the procedure of the Evidence Act and Criminal Procedure Code, which is appropriate only to the normal conditions of crime. The procedure to deal with revolutionary crime has to be practicable in the sense of being appropriate to its special conditions, so as to secure as fair a trial as is feasible under the exceptional situation. Our special procedure cannot be therefore regarded as violating the primary principle on which those laws are based.
